PROTECTING IDENTITIES AT WORK

No matter how comfortable or familiar you may feel on the job, you need to protect against workplace-related identity theft risks.

You also have a responsibility to protect the personal or sensitive information of your colleagues and employers. If you deal with the personal information of customers or clients, your responsibility is even greater.

For everyone's sake, including your own, make sure you understand and follow all organization security and privacy policies. Practice good online and offline identity protection habits. These include the following routines.

- Lock up your purse or wallet when it's not with you. Too often, payment cards, checks, and other identity-related items are stolen at the workplace.
- Also lock up person and employer-assigned mobile devices, ID badges, and workplace access cards when not in use.
- Don't put your personal information at risk in the case of a workplace security breach. Never reuse personal passwords for work, log into personal accounts from work, or store personal data or material on work computers or devices.
- Keep all work passwords and usernames confidential. Don't write them down and store them in your work area.
- Securely store all documents and other items containing your or others' personal information at the end of the workday.

MORE ON THIS SUBJECT WILL BE IN THE NEXT NEWSLETTER.
